Dear Sir,

The two different worlds that have been built between industry and institute are considered as the inherent bases of their cooperation. Industry-Institute interaction sets the momentum for technical and vocational education and training for socio-economic development. The shift from labor-intensive to knowledge-based economy reinforces the academic component that needs to be considered in the business models implemented by industries. As mentioned by you, a step towards Academic Autonomy you are planning to design a curriculum feasible to local industry and community so that the students of this area may get employment after getting the add-on certificate or diploma along with regular studies. The APML's top management team is happy to make following nominations for proposed Certificate Course in Power Plant Chemistry:
